

Valuation spreads* are at or near all-time highs across all of the universes we measure, setting up a classic value opportunity. As the spread between the cheap and expensive stocks contracts, value typically outperforms, which is demonstrated in the graphs below.

Data through September 2021. Source: Sanford C. Bernstein & Co., Pzena analysis. *Value spread, or dispersion, measures the valuation gap between the cheapest and most expensive stocks in our universes based on price-to-book ratios. Global valuation dispersion expressed in standard deviations, based on price/book of the cheapest quintile (Value Stocks) of the largest ~1,600 developed world stock universe vs. the most expensive quintile; equally-weighted data. Performance table displays periods since 1975 (inception date of MSCI World Value Index) where dispersion narrows by at least one standard deviation from peak to trough; all returns in US dollars and annualized for periods over 12 months.
